Hi Ms. Atchley,

We have your lab results back and, overall, it's good news.

Your potassium was a little low, which I think you had mentioned was a problem in the past.

The blood counts, liver, kidney and markers of inflammation were all normal.

The antibodies associated with the clotting disorder were all negative.

While the ANA came back as positive, we actually do not consider that to be a positive result, because ~10% of people will have that level.

The elbow xrays showed some mild degenerative changes, but nothing concerning.

I don't think any of our rheumatology medications will help, so we can stick to the plan of not scheduling a follow-up visit.

All the best,
